

This cladogram shows how all living things, past and present, are connected through evolution.

Cladogram means “branch drawing.” A “branch” shows us where new features evolved within groups. All organisms on the new branch share the new features, because they share an ancestor that had those features.

Shared features tell us that hominids and apes share an ancestor.